Chapter 2 by Skeld

Now, astride his Hoverbike he was looking for shelter. He hoped to find haven inside a Landworm cave. The Landworms were huge slithering beings who fed on mountains. They leave huge tunnels on the sides of hills and mountains as they fed along. Gordon hoped to find one such tunnel to rest.

After long hours of search he finally caught a glimpse of a cave.

He rested his bike near the entrance and went inside. Thrice he lost balance and fell. The sandstorms of Elkyra were no child's play. They also generate heat waves, which originate from mini-vortexes. He was lucky that he found a cave.

The cave was tall, but it was also narrow. There was just enough light for visibility. Gordon went deep inside until he found a small valley.

He woke up to the sound of water dripping from the sealing. Oh, shit he thought, Of course. The heat waves were bound to cause a heavy downpour. He stepped out of his tent and prepared to go exploring. He could check for signal reception later, right now all else was driven away by curiosity. He walked for a long time when suddenly he found that the wall had a cave dug into it. This time too curiosity got hold of him and he pulled out his Halogen torch and went inside. Suddenly, he slipped and slid down the cave for a few minutes till he reached the bottom.

He fell down through an opening and found-to his surprise- that he had found who his crew were looking for. The lost alien species of Elkyra. The Haxzings of lore. It was rumored that they were in hiding in the Underground City. Now, right before his eyes he saw the entrance to that city. It was unmistakable. The walls were made of pure Uranium and the Obsidian Gates jutted from the swampy ground. He had at last found it! and that too by accident! His exultation was interrupted when the giant gates opened and out came the Haxzings with their long Proton spears.
